In all comparative tests the cows in the open stable made a greater percentage increase in weight for the entire period of the test than those in the closed stable. Should Foundation Stock Be Calves, Heifers or Cows?--In developing a daiiy herd by buying, at least three methods are available, namely, buying calves, buying heifers and buying cows. The one for an individual breeder to choose will depend upon time, capital and other conditions, such as experience, etc. The surest and quickest way to secure a high-producing herd is to buy cows of known records. This method, of course, requires large capital at the start. In some cases, however, it Second Cross,...
