Not illustrated. 1913 Excerpt: .it by its proper name, instead of individualizing it as an irritating splinter, --that is, a thorn in the flesh. The apostle tells us that he prayed the Lord thrice that his disease might depart from him and received the reply, My grace is sufficient for you. Malaria might have departed from him, without the aid of prayer, by his merely leaving the location where he contracted it. Leave a malarial district and the disease will leave you might be accepted as an axiom. So that we may also exclude malaria as a solution of the enigma. Besides, if Paul had had malaria for so long as sixteen years, --about the period of his apostleship, --it would in all probability have so enlarged his spleen that public attention would have been drawn to it; and he would have needed a cloak indeed, not only to keep him warm, but to conceal his disfigurement. CHAPTER XIII One of the most scholarly and liberal of men, Mosheim, the genial chancellor of the University of Gottingen, and historian of Christianity during the first three centuries, was of the opinion that Paul's cause of woe was remorse for his past life, including harassing the people of the way, consenting unto the death of Stephen, and carrying persecution into the very homes of believers. The memory of these austerities, he thought, tormented Paul as a perpetual irritant and goad, and would not let him rest. Let us see what Calvin,...
