The countries won't adopt the euro as their new currency immediately, because they first have to show that their economies have converged with the economy of the euro zone. Presently, the efforts and opinions of the new members differ about the adoption of the single currency. For instance, the Slovenian Prime Minister Janez Jansa told the press in February 2006 that there is nothing on the path ahead that could endanger the euro adoption in 2007. The government pursues a tight fiscal policy to meet all entry requirements. Recently, it introduced a dual pricing that means all prices of goods and services are marked in tolaars as well as euros to raise consumer awareness in the preparation for the euro adoption.¹ Contrarily, other countries are skeptical. The leader of the Polish conservative party Jaroslaw Kaczynski said during a campaign that he doesn't see any benefits in adopting the euro. Euro adoption would lead to lower exports, lower national income and higher unemployment. The Estonian Sirje Karu said in an interview, that Estonians are scared. We heard that when Finland adopted the euro, it took them quite a while to get used to it and prices increased. The poorest suffered. Using this situation as a background, it is interesting to analyze the euro adoption by accession states. How does the adoption process work When should the euro...
