Never overstrain a belt, as this produces unnecessary wear of belts and machinery and causes great loss of power by friction. 2. Do not throw on belts when pulleys are running at an extremely high rate of speed. 3. Do not run belts exceedingly tight, as the best service and greatest power are derived by their being just slack enough not to slip. Rope Transmission.--The transmission of power is frequently accomplished by means of ropes instead of belts. In addition to other advantages of this method, ropes seldom give way without due warning by slackening or fraying in one or more of the strands, thus reducing the risk of accident, and stoppage of the mill or factory to a minimum. The working stress of the ropes being but a small fraction of their breaking strength, any signs of weakness in an individual rope would allow it to be removed, and the engine run with the remaining ropes until a convenient opportunity is offered for the replacement of the weak member. Further their comparative slackness between the pulleys facilitates their annulling any small irregularity in the motive power. These ropes are made of manilla-hemp, cotton, leather, and raw ox hide. Hemp ropes are preferred to cotton ropes for main drives with large pulleys, since they are cheaper,...
