His patient always developed bright-red erythematous patches upon the left cheek, nose and chin, the palmar aspect of the left wrist, the back of the left hand over the carpo-phalangeal articulations of the fourth and fifth fingers and the left knee. In his case, however, doses ranging from five to thirty grains were required, and the eruption only developed after the drug had produced its full effect on the system. The tendency ceased after an attack of pneumonia and did not return, thus showing that the acquired idiosyncrasy may fortunately be lost again. I do not wish to enter into the matter of treatment, excepting to draw attention to what might be a misleading statement under this head in Morrow s Drug Eruptions. The author says, Treatment is hardly ever necessary for the cutaneous disorders caused by quinine, since they spontaneously disappear on withdrawal of the offending agent. This might lead to the supposition that the rash would be gone the day after the quinine was stopped, whereas several weeks may elapse before the activity of the eruption and pruritus have ceased entirely. Indeed, the eruption may not even appear until after the drug has been withdrawn for some time. I have also been unable to verify the statement that women are more susceptible than men to quinine eruptions. My personal experience has led to the opinion that sex plays no part in their production, and that the cases are about...
