This is often the case in our methods of obtaining health. Providence has endowed our organism with the germs of countless powers and capabilities, whose natural development, and use we should always be endeavouring to promote by our actions. If we develop them fully we shall then be able to make the best use of them; but if we fail in the first, our health, our happiness, our powers and mental capabilities, will be undermined by the loss we shall sustain. The endeavor to harmonize the powers that lie within our organism, both with each other and with regard to outside circumstances, by careful and thoughtful use, and with as little...
