OCLC Number: (OCoLC)79871276 Subject: United States -- Armed Forces -- Reserves -- Operational readiness. Excerpt: . . . homeland security missions so that the readiness for these missions can be systematically measured and accurately reported. DOD agreed with our recommendations and is now taking a more active role in working with its federal and state partners to improve its ability to respond to catastrophic incidents. In addition, this year the Army has taken some steps to provide equipment to National Guard units in hurricane-prone states to temporarily improve their ability to respond to hurricanes. Specifically, the Army transferred equipment, such as trucks, floodlights, and night vision devices, from its active component units to National Guard units. Further, the Under Secretary of Defense for Personnel and Readiness has directed that the department begin tracking its readiness for some domestic missions in the new Defense Readiness Reporting System. In addition to equipment shortages, other factors have negatively affected Army National Guard and Army's reserve components personnel readiness: (1) the transfer of Army Reserve Force personnel among units to deploy ready forces, (2) fewer full-time support Significant Personnel staff than authorized, and (3) the increasing difficulty of identifying trained Challenges, Especially in personnel available to deploy for future rotations. Some Critical Skills Under tiered resourcing, Army National Guard and Army Reserve units Personnel Transfers among have generally been assigned fewer personnel than they require to perform Units to Support Deployments their assigned missions, under the assumption that the shortages could be Have Led to Shortages in filled before the units would deploy. For example, the Army Reserve has Nondeployed Units been assigned about 80 to 85 percent of its required personnel. Additionally,...
